

To our customers impacted by this storm.

I can't think of a time when our company and its employees have been shown more patience,
grace and help and assistance through this whole process.

You've embraced us in the communities that we serve.

00;00;22;14 – 00;00;24;04
We as a community care about them.

They're out there working as hard as they can to make sure everybody has their power back.

And they're doing a really good job right now.

We're very appreciative of coming together feeding us, we've had folks come out all day long everywhere we go, they're bringing food or bringing drinks.

They ask us anything we need.

Community definitely, definitely outpouring

The storm came.

It didn't discriminate against anybody.

It equally put people in the disaster zone and in the inconvenience zone.

And the lesson was, if you want to come out of that you got to pull together.

And I think that pulling together is why we see the results while we see the support, and why I'm eternally grateful for the men and women of Dominion Energy, South Carolina, and all those support personnel that rallied to their side in order to really change how we go about doing restoration that will only aid us as we go forward.
