

Peregrine Falcons

The peregrine falcon is one of the most majestic birds of prey in all of nature able to reach speeds in excess of 200 miles per hour peregrine falcons once on the verge of extinction are making a comeback thanks to lasting partnerships like the one Dominion has with Brian Watts of the Center for Conservation Biology. Yeah they usually throw out of that Dr. Watts makes periodic visits to Dominion's Possum Point power station and other Dominion facilities to keep tabs on prairie couples and their newborns. Just recently he met with Dominion chemist Dana West and her colleague Alex Nehama to check on for nesting peregrine fledglings. Although they can certainly breathe younger somewhat startled get none the worse for the wear each fledging was examined, banded and returned to their nesting home. It's just one example of our Dominion personnel routinely work in concert with nature and show their environmental stewardship through their deeds.
