Not all lineworkers are going to be seen in your neighborhood working from bucket trucks. Some of us are going to be underground, working in manholes and vaults. My name is Megan Yeager I'm a network lineworker. Network reduces your chances of outages due to storm because there's no lines overhead that trees can fall on. So all of our transformers are down underneath sidewalks and vaults, so they're protected from vehicle accidents or storm damage.

Network can be fed from multiple directions. So if a transformer goes out, it can be picked up by another transformer to feed the same customer and make sure that their lights stay on. It makes me feel like I have an impact on our community by doing this job. But overall, it feels good to know that you're providing a service that everybody needs.
